You know you can go faster. At some point, though, you have to let go. Sophie Faucherettes' third solo installation, Behind the Badge is a collection of stories set between 2023 and 2040. At the beginning of the century, Earth is a patchwork of competing empires, struggling with decline. Rich one day, poor the next, everyone lives in fear of the next looming crisis. Scientists have proven that the sustainability of their world is coming to an end. Unfortunately, no one has time to live out their lives peacefully. But in the midst of this disaster, a woman arrives with a vision of utopia: a world where everyone can live and work, and serve the planet and the people they love. Inspired by Faucherettes' real-life experience, and the international community of fans that followed her online and in person, Behind the Badge is her attempt to tell this story by bringing it to the stage. If you're familiar with Sophie Faucherettes' work, you know that she was born in Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, but she only lived there for two years before moving to the US. She lives in New Orleans, in the French Quarter. In addition to her many artistic projects, Sophie was briefly a marine biologist. She is mother to two children. This story, like many of Sophie's stories, is about a future time and space, and a future protagonist. That protagonist will be you. Not the person you think you are, though. The person you have been, and the person you will be, is not who you think you are. This is the subject of Sophie's stories. You are the child of mothers and fathers, of ancestors and descendants. You are given new parents that will love you and protect you. You are raised by saints and angels. You are given a new nation to serve and to protect. You become a superhero. You are given a new planet to protect.
