The present invention relates generally to devices for measuring the speed of an object in a fluid, and more specifically to a device for measuring the speed of a fluid flow relative to the device. Measurement of the speed and flow rate of a fluid (e.g., air, water, or other fluid) flowing through a conduit is commonly used in a variety of processes to measure the efficiency of system components and to detect undesired fluid flow conditions. By way of example, an air speed sensor (generally) refers to a device that measures and reports the speed of the air passing through the air stream. The air stream speed can then be used as a parameter in calculating the volume of air passing through the system and/or as a factor in determining whether the system is operating as designed. Air flow is determined in a variety of ways. One such method uses a venturi, which reduces the volume of air passing through the conduit by creating a lower pressure within the conduit. The change in pressure caused by this method results in a proportionate reduction in the velocity of the air. Current air flow sensors, however, do not accurately provide the flow rate or relative speed of the air, and therefore, are inadequate for many applications. Thus, what is needed is a fluid flow rate measuring device that accurately determines a relative velocity of a fluid flowing through a conduit. The present invention provides a method and device for measuring the speed of a fluid in a conduit. The device of the present invention comprises an elongate tubular member having an interior surface and at least one side wall, a vane disposed within the tubular member, and a drive mechanism connected to the tubular member and the vane for driving the vane within the tubular member. The drive mechanism comprises at least one spring and a drive rod that is slidably mounted to the tubular member. Movement of the drive rod in a first direction urges the vane against the interior surface of the tubular member, thereby causing the vane to create a first flow area. The drive rod may be advanced in a second direction that

This article seems to imply that because the Forgotten Lands act as the "Enchanter's bridge" and there is no mention of teleportation in the rules, the way in which teleportation occurs inside the MM1a world is now a bug in the system. A: Yes. The rules don't include teleportation because it isn't something you can do in Warhammer or Warhammer 40,000. Likewise, there was a reason why teleportation was specifically excluded from the Enchanter's bridge world, as it was a world not created by the magic of the Warp, and it would have been a 6a5afdab4c
