The classic “boy who cried wolf” story by metaphor, but Kyler Murray is an actual boy. After taking the ball a bit too often in every game this season except two, Murray (perhaps fearing his first ever coaching change) blew hot air that his wolverine “momentum” would be remembered, but will soon be forgotten as time passes. The “momentum” that Murray is referring to is the mind-blowing performance that he provided for the Sooners throughout the 2019 season, which began when he led the Sooners to a 52-49 win over Vanderbilt in the season opener and continued through a 67-31 defeat at the hands of South Carolina State. Even with the various personnel issues and the coaching change, Murray’s success hasn’t waned. In fact, OU is the only team in the Big 12 that is undefeated at 4-0. For now, it’s just Murray’s confidence and his performance in the air and on the ground. “I’ve been getting a little bit better with every practice,” Murray told Smith. “I’ve been getting better in every facet of the game. Just getting a little bit better with every week.” The Oklahoma defense may
