The study involved the morphometric analysis of the infarcts in autopsy material in 55 men and 46 women who died at the age of 45-74 years. The value of the fibrous tissue in the infarcts was minimal in the infarcts of the anterior wall, moderate in the infarcts of the inferior wall and close to zero in the infarcts of the posterior wall. The maximum thickness of the fibrous capsule in the latter was 37.5 +/- 14.4 microns. The artery supplying the myocardium in the infarcted area was a coronary artery in 68% and a cardiac vein in 24% of cases. The coronary artery which supplies the myocardium in the infarcted area--relatively often--is of the first order (96% and 76% of the cases of the anterior and inferior myocardial infarcts, respectively). The incidence of the myocardial infarction and the extent of the fibrous tissue in the infarcted myocardium to which the coronary artery supplies were significantly higher in men than in women, while the differences in the degree of myocyte injury did not reach statistical significance.The Honorable Raymond N.
