One of the older ways of creating macros is via command sequences such as MS-DOS commands such as > nul, which save the entire current document to the temporary file and then overwrite the current file. Many Macros are written in Visual Basic for Applications. Many macros can be created in any programming language and source language (such as C, C++, FORTRAN, Pascal, Basic, Tcl, Perl, Python, AutoLISP, Visual LISP) which can then be dynamically loaded. If a language is not used in a given application it can be ignored at the macro level. Some languages, such as AutoLISP, can be imported into AutoCAD and used in macros. Some developers write their own macro languages for AutoCAD. The most common are AutoLISP and Visual LISP. Using code AutoCAD provides macros as a scripting mechanism to allow developers to add additional functionality to the product. AutoCAD provides these macros in the dll: AutoCAD.Application.Mx AutoCAD.Application.Mx.Actions AutoCAD.Application.Mx.Display AutoCAD.Application.Mx.System AutoCAD.Application.Mx.Storage AutoCAD.Application.Mx.Table AutoCAD.Application.Mx.Form It is also possible to code macros in Visual Basic for Applications. In a macro all parts of the program are stored in a string and evaluated as a string: MyMacro = "someCODE" Dim MyMacro As String MyMacro = "Initiate();" & vbCrLf & "DrawLine(""100,100,300,300""", myPointName, myPen) & vbCrLf & "End;" MyMacro will evaluate to "Initiate();" & vbCrLf & "DrawLine(""100,100,300,300""", myPointName, myPen) & vbCrLf & "End;" The string can be stored in a string variable and evaluated at a later time. MyMacro = "Initiate();" & vbCrLf & "DrawLine(""100,100,300,300""", myPointName, myPen) & vbCrLf & "End 5b5f913d15

I am aware of this problem for a couple of months now. I have searched a lot of forums for solutions but haven't found anything that worked for me. I have a GTD mobile application for my Pocket PC (Palm Treo) and recently I upgraded my Pocket PC. After the upgrade, I am unable to run the application without the following error message popping up. It also works properly on the original version of the program. Would appreciate if anyone could help me with this problem. Thanks! Hi, thanks for the reply, I am not able to find the file you mentioned but I have found a file in the Temp folder with the same name, can you please send the file to my email address, That file has the same content. Hi, thanks for your reply. I was able to locate the file you mentioned and email it to you. I am still unable to get it to work though. I have been running the test project since the update and was not able to figure out the solution. Hi,Thanks for your reply, I am still unable to get it to work. And I have tried to rebuild the mobile project but no luck. I am able to run the application by installing on the new phone though. I am using the 32 bit version of the program. If the application fails to run, the error message will pop up: The application will close in 0 seconds. The application will continue to run in the background.I created a new project to test it out and it works fine. Any changes made to the project that cause the application to fail to run will still cause the error message. Hi,Thanks for your reply. I am still unable to get it to work. Streamlined dials to select tools or edit properties. Improved help systems and tips for usage, for example, the ability to view tools without a model. AutoSketch: A new sketching tool that enables you to create realistic, finished sketches from scratch. Use simple commands like "Move cursor to" and "Select objects to" to draw basic sketches with AutoSketch. The tool is intuitive and works like traditional sketching tools, but allows you to connect the sketches to be used as one object. Grouping improvements: The context menu now includes an option for "Group Drawings" that enables you to group drawings into separate entities. You can then apply settings to these entities, such as commands to fill or apply a view or extrusion. You can also apply edit settings like color, linetype, pattern and text. Grouping options: Creating complex groups in AutoCAD allows you to quickly see, edit and navigate through your drawing objects. Now you can group objects into layers and further sublayers, by choosing "Create new sublayers" from the context menu. Batch recalculations: Automatic recalculations of complex drawings enable you to work more quickly and efficiently. Just set the parameter value to "Recalculate every x minutes" and you can view and create multiple drawings on a regular basis. AutoCAD only recalculates objects and not the entire drawing, but you can adjust the recalculation interval in the Drawing & Annotation dialog box. New features for the animation builder: The animation builder is the perfect tool to add live animation to your designs. Build scenes with the new animation builder, edit the scenes, add keyframes and change the properties of animated objects. Improved right-click menu for trim curves: The trimming menu now includes a "Freehand Trim" option. You can create more accurate trim curves using this option, by selecting the points in the curve and defining a custom curve. You can also use this option to display and edit the calculated trim line and measure the resulting accuracy. A new menu command for the animation builder: The new animation builder command "Add animation" is used to add frames to the animation. You can add new frames to existing animations or create a new animation based on the selected objects
