[Mac] If you plan to hire a singing voicecover talent, then you'll probably want to know how long their recorded lines will need to be for best effect. Hiring voice talents based on time can be expensive so it's worth knowing how long each take can be. Whatever genre you're working on you need to know how long each take will take. There are voice talents out there that will agree to do a short voicecover if the pay is good. They would say they need only 2 to 3 takes to get the job done. To have the best quality and pay, you should only work with a voice talent that's committed to getting it done in only one take. If you're doing a story-driven CD, a commercial, or a product-driven CD, then you'll need a voice talent that will stay with you from take to take, and will be committed to your project. With that kind of talent you should be able to get what you need in one take. You'll be able to make your clients happy and get the job done in one take with a committed voice talent. A good voice talent will have a good work ethic. They will get the job done in one take and they'll be ready for the next task. As long as they're committed to the project, you'll get what you need in one take. I've worked with voice talents that will take 3 days to do one take, and the other voices that will take only a few hours.
