The need for additional memory is becoming increasingly important. However, the cost of expensive RAM is not always a practical option. In case you need to free up some memory without spending money, you can use Task Manager to do that. It is a great tool that can help you identify any applications that are using a large amount of RAM or CPU. It will also allow you to end programs that are hogging up system resources or even create new processes to free up some memory. While you can use Task Manager to free up some memory, there is another solution that is known as the System Optimizer. It is one of the most downloaded and popular tools that enable you to free up some RAM and CPU. System Optimizer is a freeware program that has been downloaded more than 125 million times. According to this website, the tool has been downloaded over a million times in the last three months alone. The application can free up RAM and CPU from the Windows taskbar, the system tray, quick launch icons and desktop and other applications that use memory. It is possible to end processes that are consuming your RAM as well as you can free up memory from many more applications.

System Optimizer can be used in two ways First off, you should know that you can install the program on either a PC or a laptop. On a laptop, you will find the quick launch icon along with the System Optimizer. As you launch it, you will see the Start menu items in the right column. They are all sorted from the most recently launched to the oldest. The second way to run System Optimizer is to drag the desktop icon from the Start menu to the Taskbar. In case you need to see its menu items, then you can choose the More Items option in the taskbar to see them. The interface is a little complex for a beginner Like any other tool, the system optimizer is not really a difficult one to use. However, some of the menu items in the taskbar and in the main program window might appear a little confusing to the inexperienced user. The first option you need to choose from is the one that starts the tool. The second step is to choose which applications to scan. Once you have selected a few, you need to click the Scan button to start the scans. While you can select all the programs or just those that consume your system resources, there are a few different options for the duplicates to be removed. You can choose the option to remove duplicates from the desktop
