About The Author I am a humble Android user, though am not sure whether I'd count myself as a geek. I write, play and watch movies but time is not always my best friend. I usually wake up late and end up making a late night trip to the websites to grab the latest updates as soon as possible. That being said, I am a bookworm and a loner - or so I think. ;)Wikimedia Commons What's the best group of people you can say you know? I'm going to start with people I know, then I'm going to extend to friends, then acquaintances, then family members, then friends of friends and then people I've worked with. Finally, I'm going to expand to people with whom I have some kind of relationship, even if it's an online one. Lucky for you, I've compiled the most well-loved groups of people on my own wiki page. After scrolling down, you'll see a list of groups ranging from the "universally loved" to the "possibly hated" to the "arguably useful" to the "significant others." Enjoy. The people I love Some people I know really well and some people I know a little bit. All of them have made the list—with the exception of Gary from Gary's Place. I love Gary for his pizza, his San Diego Padres, his encouraging jokes and most of all, for being an incredibly nice and reliable guy. The people I hate I don't

I am also a business owner and entrepreneur. I like to think of myself as a true believer in innovation in computer and technology products. Who We Are We are a team of writers and editors that have been working together at VentureBeat since 2006. We've been quoted in the New York Times, watched our videos featured on YouTube's front page dozens of times, and were even interviewed by a high-ranking member of the British Parliament. If you were expecting an epic backstory along with this role, you're in for a disappointment. Can you trick a bunch of people into doing what you want them to? Over the last year or so, enterprise software vendors have gone to an extreme to protect their intellectual property. While this has led to some innovative approaches to expanding the security and utility of their products, it has had the unfortunate side-effect of making some things proprietary. You can only build on open source software if the licenses are open. They're open enough for your average user, sure, but enterprise builds are not open. Well, they are for you, if you work at many of the vendors that use those builds. CNET reports that the open source CellPlayer app for Android has had its source code secreted away inside a NDA, and so we won't see many new features there. We wish the code was published, or at least used as a starting point for Google or the Android community. But we don't blame the vendor — the fact is, they're under no obligation to share that code. However, the fact that the code was locked away in an NDA can be considered a code of honor. We do applaud companies like the GPL offering for taking something you'd like to innovate on, even if
