2:33 Incorporating Data Validation into the ARES 3D. Incorporating Data Validation into the ARES 3D. Incorporating Data Validation into the ARES 3D, this is Part 2 of 2. In this part, we'll talk about converting rings into curves. Like ARES, this is a polygon tool. I've used it a few times before, you'll most probably never use this, but it is nice to know. So in ARES, there's a box where you can type in whatever polygon you would like in the context of the current drawing. If you like, you can also provide a height field and split type as well. In this case, I'll type in a simple ring. So that's basically it, we'll go to the 'Layers'. In that tab, we can click on a layer, and it will add that layer to our 'Stack'. We will now type in 'Curves' and move it to the front. This is basically it, we can delete the ring if we want to. We will now type in 'Direction' to get the circles. You could also use 'Polygon Points' if you wanted to create circles, but I'm using 'Direction' so it's easier for this example. With this tool, you can fill in any curve you want in any direction and it will split your ring into circles. You can simply click on each one you like if you want to split the layer further. If you don't like them, you can make a layer and disable them. We'll go back to the layers tab and scroll down to the bottom. We will create another layer called 'Tube'. We will set the depths to be negative. We'll make it 'Color' from black and white. The thickness will be the same as the previous one. Now I'll type in another ring and leave it be. I do this because I can move these layers around. So let's go to the circles we just made and put a curve on it. We will now go to the Layers tab and scroll down to the bottom. We
