This paper presents a study of 40 patients, with the diagnosis of pleural effusion, where thoracic computerised tomography, was performed and compared with the classical radiologic examination, for the demonstration of pleural thickening and/or cavitation. When the pleural thickening was strongly suggestive of malignancy, the thoracic computerised tomography was considered positive in 19 out of 21 patients; the result was negative in 11 patients, and unspecific in 11 patients. Thus the thoracic computerised tomography was superior to the classical radiologic examination in the presence of pleural thickening. The sensitivity of the thoracic computerised tomography was 98% in this study.A Brief History of Enlightened Economics 2. The idea of 'sound economics' dates back to the age of Classical Athens in the 4th century BC. In this world of simple exchange, there was not a surplus to be extracted. The early foundation of modern economics was set by the Polish-born philosopher and mathematician Nicholas Kaldor (1896-1976), who wrote a book called The Methodology of Positive Economics. 5. The method of Classical Economics in the 18th century, the economist Adam Smith was encouraged by the French economist Quesnay to study the theories of the previous century and write his book The Wealth of Nations. Smith concluded that "The wealth of nations consists, not in the number of individuals who live in a state of abundance, but in the number of individuals who live in a state of abundance and who are able to gain and distribute the necessaries and comforts of life among all the members of the society". 6. In the 19th century, Karl Marx rebelled against Classical Economics. He found Adam Smith's system to be too abstract, and refused to accept the idea of a 'free market� d0c515b9f4
