The International Telecom Union and an International Labour Organization Complaints Mechanism will track down those responsible for the deaths of low-paid workers who were victims of serious or persistent health risks arising from poor working conditions. “Solidarity and justice” will be part of the union’s program for the International Year of the Workers, and investigations into abuses and fora will be expanded in the affected countries. The ITU and ILO will monitor and flag such sites, and any new legal efforts against them, including reform. The recommendations – which may be adopted as official ITU and ILO standards – will be published in early 2009, with a call for the governments of the affected countries to ensure that “corporate social responsibility” is included in their national legislation to tackle poor labour standards and the exploitation of workers. “The ITU and the ILO will help to restore workers’ dignity in the workplace,” said ITU
