Introduction Xerox Phaser 9500 is a multifunction printer, copier, and scanner. It can handle a variety of media, ranging from plain paper to film. It uses a proprietary printing technology called Phaser, an upgraded version of Xerox's PageWide technology. It was the first handheld laser printer for desktop use and the world's first handheld mobile printer. It is also the first printer to be networked over the Web. However, as time passed and the product line has kept a yearly update to the product line, the update process has often been behind due to the above reasons. After a year, or two years, or even more, people may have gotten tired of waiting for the update and may want to switch to a newer more efficient machine. This report documents the release of the new version of OXPIV and Phaser 714 for Xerox Phaser 9500. Both of these components are released together because they share nearly all of the same code. The release includes both DVD and CD versions that will install all the software on both the CD and DVD. It also includes Microsoft Windows based drivers. This is a native Windows driver that is written using Visual Studio.NET 2005 and 2005 CTP 3.0. It is tested with Windows XP, Windows Vista, and Windows 7. The expected benefits of this release are:

- Better performance and better Windows integration.
- Fewer updates and reboots.
- Improved reliability and stability.
- Fewer bugs and security updates.
- Greater

flexibility in development. Introduction The Phaser PHIV
