

Chronicle is a free Flash-based role-playing game, where you take on the role of a newly-born infant spirit named Chronicle (if you choose the female version, Luna, you take on the role of Archangel), and fight to defend the earth from evil forces. In Chronicle, you are able to alter the settings and physics of the game world. You can summon your own spirits to fight alongside you, and you are able to manipulate the entire environment to create your own challenges. At the same time, you can manipulate and change your own character's appearance and abilities to adapt to the game's different combat scenarios. The game contains over 60 different enemies, with the enemy type and levels of challenge varying depending on your actions and decisions. There are also over 30 different character types with various special skills and attributes, and over 40 different spells to research to develop your own combat capabilities. "[Chronicle: Unit Eight] is a title I was expecting to buy eventually but for the money you pay, you don't expect to play it and end up playing it for a couple of hours. This shouldn't happen, especially given how good it is." Kotaku "For people who have played through a lot of these clone-ish JRPGs out there, you can at least appreciate what this game is able to offer, it's unique and different. So if you are new to the genre and looking for a solid classic experience that doesn't require a lengthy investment of your time and money, Chronicle: Unit Eight might just be what you are looking for." 4/5 - TechRaptor "...what this game offers is a fantastic blend of nostalgic gameplay, a stylish presentation, and a witty and deeply touching story. It's a great game for any JRPG fan, especially those who haven't played one for a while." 5/5 - Game Revolution Key Features: •Intuitive, Sleek, and Stylish Gameplay Chronicle is being developed from the ground up by independent developer, Doraemon Inc. They are focused on making the game a very intuitive experience as well as a stylish one. On Wednesday the Republican and Democratic candidates for attorney general square off in a debate in Denver that's likely to be a bit awkward. Last year, Larry Dunlap resigned as the District Attorney for Colorado to run for governor. Dunlap ran on promises to reform the state's death penalty and crack down on crime. But while he's campaigned hard, his opponents have argued that's a flawed platform. Last Thursday, Dunlap endorsed fellow Republican John Suthers, a Fort Collins prosecutor, and he's now enlisting support from other attorneys general. The race d41b202975

, which is slated to be fully released soon via Early Access, is an interesting mix of puzzle and stealth gameplay in a visually striking and well-designed, but somewhat empty world. It's a lot like classic games like Portal, but with 3D graphics - and some graphical twist. It's a great game, and I'm sure it would have earned 5/5 stars if they weren't a Kickstarter campaign. The issue is that the game ISN'T FUN and it's very bloody niche when you compare it to the likes of Portal, but that's not to say it's a bad game. It has some very pretty visuals, a clever puzzle-solving, stealth and slow gun-based gameplay that runs somewhat parallel to the Valve classics. I always liked Portal, and recently I've been having fun with an indie puzzler Game of Raft, by Normal Bar Location, and so I thought Block Star VR was a worthwhile time and video to record and share. Gameplay The game runs on a small world map that's essentially a floor which you navigate by rotating the camera. You can still enter your own rooms, as they're also mapped, but it's easily done via the top-down camera view. The world spawns atmosphere and debris - such as gas and electrical towers - which can be used as cover to block your way, or trip you, using a power meter and a 3D "edge weight" system. I love how they're both quite powerful, making you think about how to play the level in a variety of ways, which is very rewarding for the player. The game has two main gameplay modes, puzzle and stealth, and it's far more about the puzzle mode than the stealth mode, and they're both difficult, but rewarding. The stealth mode is hidden away into a tiny room with 3D procedural objects, and then it's just a slow, puzzle-based level which you use environment to solve through to the ultimate objective. It's not about speed and action - it's more of a single stage puzzle game. It's easy to get into, and the puzzles are pretty fun, and it was fun just plain old puzzle game. The puzzle mode is all about environment and object usage, while you're in cover. You can use objects and environment to your advantage - a place that would be deadly to walk into on the ground, under an object, over an object, or to simply block an angle through a wall - and after that, you just hope
