These jobs usually involve safeguarding someone's fundamental rights (in some countries called human rights) and defending individuals in criminal courts. However, many public defenders are also concerned with the rights of vulnerable people, including prisoners' rights. Types of Public Defenders Public defenders may be appointed by governments or by non-governmental organisations or courts. Typically public defenders' jobs are for a fixed term and they earn a salary, rather than a fee per case. Public defenders may work as solo practitioners or in teams. There may be two or more public defenders in a team. Public defenders do different jobs. These include: Hiring a public defender or advising a person charged with a crime how to find a public defender. If a person charged with a crime is found to be mentally incapable, the judge may appoint a public defender as the person's legal adviser. Public defenders normally represent people who are accused of crimes and found guilty of those crimes. The job of a public defender can be emotional and stressful, especially when the person being defended is charged with a crime, as they are regarded as the main legal representative of an individual.. 140, 176, 732 A.2d 1212 (1999), on remand, 144 N.J. 427, 677 A.2d 706 (1996). [15] In Johnson, we specifically held that the rationale of the dissent in Rova Farms has been applied to the even stricter exclusionary rule applied in constructive possession cases involving narcotics. The dissent in Rova Farms correctly noted that the threat to the orderly administration of criminal justice is even greater in the constructive possession cases than in the possession cases. Rova Farms also cites to United States
