37.1% [50] REVIEWS ELDEN RING game: ✓ Great gameplay ✓ I Love the Elden Ring!! ✓ The Elden Ring is a fine action RPG! ✓ I Love the Elden Ring!! ✓ Best RPG Game ✓ The Elden Ring is an exceptional RPG ✓ Best Fantasy Role Playing ✓ Great content. ✓ I Love the Elden Ring!! ✓ A really nice game. ✓ Best RPG Game ✓ Plus, I love the Elden Ring! ✓ I Love the Elden Ring!! COMPETITOR ANALYSIS Most of the times, when the release of a new game is announced, new competition starts. And so, with the release of the Elden Ring, it would be natural to think that the competition would start right then. Then we can all see which games are up there right now, on the second or third place in the ranking of the best Fantasy Role Playing Games. It is worth mentioning that although there are no other games that I don't know, and for the record, I'm not claiming that Elden Ring is a Great Game, I can only say that the Elden Ring is not the only game that can be appreciated. And although I believe that the Elden Ring is an excellent RPG, I also believe that there are other good RPGs in the market today. For the record, I do not want to criticize any of the known RPGs, since this is not the purpose of this review. However, I do want to underline that I still think that the Elden Ring is not that bad compared to the ones that I mentioned. But perhaps many others will have the same reaction about it that I have. The main reason why I think that the competition starts now, is the fact that the RPG market is alive and well. There are RPGs for everyone. And if you have not played The Elder Scrolls V: Skyrim yet, you should definitely go play it. There are other RPG giants around, like The Witcher or Dragon Age. If you prefer a game that is more western-like, there are also RPGs like Fallout 4 or Dragon Age: Inquisition, and so on, they are all awesome. So, we can all agree that not only has the RPG industry been growing, but the bff6bb2d33

Thanks to Lingao for the tip.

Now armed with information about the download size and the heuristics used at GameSpot, you can use various online tools to analyze the GameSpot data and come up with more insights.

Even the smallest picture at the top-right corner gives you a preliminary idea of the game's traffic stats:

Ok, so it's a success the site top-right image, then – what about the traffic trends?

One of the first things that caught my attention was the peak of traffic between 4:00 AM and 5:00 AM (Pacific time), a.k.a. general night time in the US. This indicates that the site is popular around the world, but the traffic is mostly coming from the US. This is a very nice impression of the stats!

However, looking at the graph with a closer look, you notice the following facts:

• The traffic spikes happen during the AM – PM Time shift (they correlate), which means that one of the scenarios that attracts the traffic at the site are articles published during the daily popular time (US Pacific Time).

• The traffic is in most cases (†

Q: Call function in parent document (controller) from a DIV? I have a page with a div, inside of which I have the following function: function clicked() { alert(1); } How can I call this function from within the div? Thanks A: If your div is in the same domain as your main document, you could use window.top.clicked or window.self.clicked. Edit: The question was originally about binding a click-event handler to a DOM node and I missed that part. That's not what happened, but nonetheless, try this: function clicked(element) { alert(1); } If you want a click handler to have a different behaviour for different types of elements, you need to make a custom event in your parent document and attach it to the child element, and then use a delegated handler, so that it's delegated to elements that are not ancestors of the clicked element. var clicked = document.createEvent("Event"); clicked.initEvent("click", true, true); // Perform standard DOM operations on the element var b = document.getElementById("your_id"); b.addEventListener("click", function (evt) { // The event is canceled if this returns false. return true; }, false); // Attach a handler to the document. This should work // for both "click" and "mousedown" events. document.addEventListener("click", function (evt) { // The event is canceled if this returns false. return true; }, false); ... Q: How to show the difference between two versions of a large table? Using mysql or sqlite, how can I show the difference between two versions of a large table? I know there are some old versions of a table (some rows) and I want to compare to what's in the new versions of that table (new rows). A: Building off of googie's answer, you can use a full select to get the results you want: SELECT SUM(IF(`version1`.`status`='pending',1,0)) AS `added_versions`
