What's new in Fantasy Grounds - Compass Point 04 - Grunk's Lair (3.5E):

The de Young is a non-profit cultural institution with limited admission in Golden Gate Park in San Francisco, California. The de Young serves as the permanent home of the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art and the San Francisco Museum of Craft and Design. Building The de Young Museum was designed by architects James Leeson, John Bakewell, and Madeline Gins. Gins, who eventually won the Pritzker Prize, is credited with bringing international attention to the museum's design. Gins collaborated with architects Michael Maltzan, Thomas Lin, and Raphael Soriano; landscape designer Warren Platner; and engineer John Burgee. Construction on the de Young Museum, which filled the site that was to become the Central Pacific Railroad Museum's Ferry Building, began in 1970. Construction was originally to be funded entirely by the railroad. Public financing for the building was provided by the city and the California Arts Council. The building is composed of two sections. The first level is a piazza, with a magnolia tree at its center. From this level the piazza is topped with a colossal bronze statuette, "Woman of a Thousand Faces," which rises 11 stories to a height of 22 1/2 feet. The second level consists of exhibition galleries, sculpture gardens, a library, classrooms, and offices. The structure is a hollow cube of reinforced concrete, with a steel framework inside. The exterior walls are hung with 1,000 square feet of glass. The towers rise to 300 feet on each side. The same crisscross wood pattern runs around the exterior walls inside. This pattern was designed by noted architect James Carpenter, who worked on the original Clubhouse at the Palm Springs Racquet Club. The lobby wall in the de Young Museum's Tower Building, a smaller part of the museum, is a partially reflecting pool in depth. This aqua-colored light is colored and intensified by continuous reflections. While similar to the white marble design of the National Building Museum, the de Young's interior differs from that of the National Building Museum in that it is organized around two oval halls. The oval hall is in the lower level of the Tower Building. It is a corridor or corridor gallery by 20 feet, with a total volume of and six million pounds of steel. The space is used to display painting, sculpture, and drawings from the museum's permanent collection. The lower level was designed to harmonize with the natural surroundings of the park, and for this reason, it is surrounded

There is a lot of change including two major changes. The first is the introduction of support for two new web application programming interfaces (APIs). The wss web application security standard and the html5 web content security standard. The report also discusses the update of the HTTP specification. This includes changes to MIME types and their encodings. Previous versions of HCL explained that the MIME type should be for Web Application Security (wss) and not Web security (html5). This is an error and there is no wss other then a red herring for applications. The second change is that HCL will be distributed via the Go Open Source Software (GOS) system with the aim of gaining access to more open source tools. This was previously described as being under development at the end of October 2010. The project will allow access to tools like the commercial tool Pex which has been previously unable to be used as legal reasons allow it to be purchased.The Ancient City (1918 film) The Ancient City is a 1918 American silent film directed by Léonce Perret and written by Jane Million. The film stars Herbert Rawlinson, Nancy Linden, William Elmer, Grace Diamond, William Steele and Joseph Stanley. The film was released on February 5, 1918, by Paramount Pictures. Plot As described in a film magazine, London-born Miss Lorraine, as daughter of a wealthy father, has crossed the seas to marry the young Earl of Holland. Cast Herbert Rawlinson as Earl of Holland Nancy Linden as Lorraine Thie-Delamare William Elmer
