The first major feature introduced by “HyperMotion” is the introduction of the “Pass and Move” function, which consists of the following two parts: 1) Pass and 2) Move. “Pass and Move” is essentially a new “tag” introduced to the game play. “Pass and Move” is automatically enabled when a new “tag” is created, or when a new team is introduced. “Pass and Move” is disabled when a “tag” is deleted. “Pass and Move” is activated during the “Pitch Action”, “Movement” and “Dribbling” actions, as well as during specific football actions, such as “rolling the ball” or “nudging the ball”. In-game tutorials will guide players through the process of “Pass and Move”, showing players how to choose the right moment to execute the next move, as well as how to develop a successful strategy, by which players can play more confidently. Another feature introduced by “HyperMotion” is “Predictive Controls.” Players can now use the “Move and Shoot” function during the “Shoot” action in order to build up a good attack. A similar function is also added to “Shoots”, where players can control the trajectory of the ball when executing a “Shoot”. Players can use the “Pass and Move” function to change the velocity of the ball, and the direction of the ball, by changing the current shooting position of their dribble. Furthermore, the new “Pass and Move” function changes the direction of the passing in an instant, and players can change the target of their pass according to their position on the pitch. The “Pitch Action” makes the ball move along its natural path, so the ball will not deviate from the planned route, according to the position and intention of the player who is executing the “Pass and Move”. In the new “Pitch Action”, there is a new “Flow” function. To increase the unpredictability and variety of a game, the “Flow” function enables the ball to change its direction when dribbling, as well as the speed and location of a tackle,
