"FIFA is a game that requires simulation accuracy of a real football match," said producer David Rutter. "With the HyperMotion technology we are now able to use data from our elite fitness geeks to simulate a full-blown football match, including the 'real people' movements of 22 players." Players will be able to create their own "pro" mode and work as quickly as they need, and can switch between modes in-game at any time. Players will also be able to use the match engine to play real opponents, or adapt or modify the settings for a 'capture only' play session with the Arena Players. ESPN The Magazine's 11 Up is an award-winning feature that profiles the best players of today, tomorrow and yesterday. Its first installment, released Wednesday, featured Barcelona's Lionel Messi and Real Madrid's Cristiano Ronaldo. Motivation: Real Madrid Goalkeeper: Sergio Romero Since turning down offers from Barcelona and the Seattle Sounders, Romero has proven his fitness and ability by playing on through injury. He has defied the odds this season, putting in some scintillating performances. And he's lethal when it comes to long-range strikes. He was both second-best and first-worst in the air, adding four interceptions and eight clearances to his total of five. Lionel Messi Porto's Ronaldo Siqueira, 30, has been one of the best goalkeepers in the world for a decade. He is having another good year, and his one saving grace has been his fitness. The 30-year-old was suspended in the Champions League opener against Sporting Lisbon after a rash of head injuries, but came back in the following match. He's only started twice, but still has time to establish himself as one of the world's best keepers. Buyer's regret: Manchester City Manchester City fans are disappointed their side has lost out on the opportunity to sign Juventus starlet Emre Can at an estimated price of $34 million. City has previously expressed strong interest in Can, 20, a defensive midfielder who has impressed at the Camp Nou. Lionel Messi The Argentina and Barcelona star, 31, is having an exceptional year and has already scored more than 23 goals in all competitions. He has added a few more assists and now leads the scoring charts in the Champions League. His

Context Sensitive Controls FIFA 22 now supports game-pad movements on the PS4™ and Xbox One™. On these platforms, such as the Football Manager series, FIFA, and Ultimate Team, game-pad-enabled controls will be automatically enabled at the start of each new game.
