"With 3,500 animations and over 200 different passes and dribbles, each of the 22 players on the pitch represented in the game have unique reactions and behaviours to give players a realistic, immersive experience," said Tyler McVey, FIFA Studio Head. While FIFA 22 addresses the realism of on-field physics for the first time, it's the game's movement and animation technology that marks a new generation of gameplay for the franchise. The global team has delivered on their promises by delivering an intense, high-tempo, and ultra-realistic experience that will thrill the millions of fans that play FIFA. "We're introducing technology that will bring fans closer to the games," said Tom Gunning, Producer, FIFA. "With the new engine and 'HyperMotion' technology, players can feel the impact of every tackle and every shot. The way you play the game will feel completely new." FIFA 22 features the latest advancements in physics, animation and player behaviour. Player models now respond realistically to the on-field challenges, providing a level of polish never before seen in a FIFA title. The game also features new animation workflows, cover loads and pre-defined animations for every player action that puts the player's role in front of the screen. The depth of coverage in Player Behaviour has also been vastly improved with new goal celebrations, defender rushes and more. In addition, more than 500 new animations have been introduced for players, fans, and the brand new careers mode, including fakes, celebrations and throws. "The physics, animation, and player collision work done on the new engine is really the most important thing in the game, because it makes the gameplay look realistic," said Peter Marshall, Senior Design Director at EA Canada. "We're delivering the ball with more accuracy and control. And in shooting, passing and goal kicks, players are also throwing the ball with more sophistication." The game delivers the most advanced player models in any game ever. In addition, advanced animation and player reaction libraries have been upgraded, and every player can now be seen using a new damage system for when they are tackled. Each player type reacts differently depending on their position and the strength of the tackle or collision. At the same time, the damage system allows players to be repaired to match the intensity of the impact, and both the timing and severity of the player's injuries are based on the force
