potential destination. After a number of excellent performances in the heart of Newcastle's midfield this season, Murphy has impressed Arsenal and others with his displays. He's a very capable young footballer who's now attracting the attention of European clubs and a move away from the club could be one of the most exciting developments of the transfer window. His future has been a source of debate in the Echo Towers of late. We've taken a look at the pros and cons of keeping him at the club for the next two years, so let's take a deeper look at whether Newcastle would be best off loaning him out to another Premier League club. A Premier League move is best

Newcastle are a football club that strives for European football. A move to the French capital, home of PSG and Zlatan Ibrahimovic, could be the perfect move for a young player looking to prove himself. They already have 18-year-old striker Tammy Abraham in the mix for first-team football and while Murphy is probably not in a situation to be making the breakthrough at the moment, he could offer them quality and a plan B in the Championship and abroad. He may only have a season to show for his efforts this term, and who knows if he can force his way into the first team, but if he looks like he has the ability to play at the top level, a move to PSG or another top-flight club would be absolutely ideal. The decision to keep him at the club is a good one, but it could be hugely beneficial to play him in a top-tier environment. Even though he's only on loan, it still makes sense to keep him here until he has no choice but to prove himself. A top-flight move is the best way to do so. The Blues should consider loaning him out The decision to sign someone like Murphy, let's say, on loan is

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a power distribution system for motor vehicles, and more particularly to a power distribution system for motor vehicles which is constructed so as to supply power from a plurality of electrically driven electrical equipment to the electrical load devices of the motor vehicle. 2. Description of the Prior Art Various types of electric equipments have been employed for many different purposes in motor vehicles. In recent years, in order to provide electrically driven electrical equipments for use in motor vehicles, it has become the general practice to employ a power distribution system for supplying the electrical energy from the conventional battery of the motor vehicle for use by the various electrically driven electrical equipments. The prior art power distribution system as described above is defective in design in that, while the power distribution system is capable of supplying electrical energy to the respective electrically driven electrical equipments, it has been found that the prior art power distribution system suffers from the disadvantages in that the addition of more electrically driven electrical equipment to the system causes a great increase in the wiring (particularly in the number of wiring harness) for connection of the power distribution system. Also, it has been found that a great increase in the wiring of the prior art power distribution system causes an increase in the weight and cost of the motor vehicle. Thus, there has been an increasing demand for the development of a power distribution system having the capability of reducing the wiring and the cost. Further, the prior art power distribution system has the following disadvantages in construction. In order to provide a multiplicity of electrically driven electrical equipments for motor vehicles, it is necessary to provide a great number of electrical terminals for electrical connection with the electrically driven electrical equipments and the power distribution system. In order to reduce the number of electrical terminals, the prior art power distribution system has been designed so as to incorporate the power distribution system within the casing of the vehicle. This design contributes to an increase in the cost of the motor vehicle. Further, in the prior art power
