Know about Photoshop software To edit and create imagery from scratch you must know about the fundamental principles of Photoshop. In this post, you will learn about the Photoshop functions and how they are used. Learn about Photoshop camera settings A camera uses settings such as aperture and shutter speed in the hope that this will give you an image with a good quality. However, you can control these aspects of the camera by selecting the number of stops (f-stop or aperture) that your camera uses and the shutter speed that you use. The f-stop is equivalent to the size of the iris in your lens. The smaller the number, the larger the iris is and vice versa. As you can imagine, one stop less than the aperture is equal to stopping one stop down (a half stop would be halved). As the f-stop decreases, you need to take a smaller aperture and in turn, move the shutter speed up by the same number as the f-stop. You should use the same f-stop value when using a tripod as you do when handholding the camera without a tripod. You can't place a tripod near the camera when you are shooting quickly to avoid movement. You want the tripod to be a few feet away so that you can hold the camera steady to avoid distortion when you shoot. You can't use a slow shutter speed and travel the ISO value up to avoid motion blur as your camera does. You can fine-tune the settings of your camera by modifying the following parameters: Custom settings Spot metering Preferences Choose an aperture value based on the ISO value. You should always use the same value for both tripod and non-tripod photography to avoid distortion. To estimate the required f-stop and shutter speed for this ISO value, you can use the below table.

ISO	f-stop	Shutter speed	Depth of field
5	5.6	1/125	18mm
6	4.8	1/125	25mm
6.5	4.4	1/125	36mm
7.5	3.6	1/125	50mm
8.2	3.2	1/125	100mm
10	2.8	1/200
