Effect of beta-adrenergic receptor blockade on regional lung blood flow distribution in rabbits. The aim of the study was to determine whether use of a single beta-adrenergic receptor antagonist (metoprolol) can reduce ventilation/perfusion inhomogeneity of the pulmonary blood flow distribution (Qv/Qt) in awake rabbits. The Qv/Qt in the lungs of five rabbits was determined before and after the administration of metoprolol (7 mg.kg-1.min-1) over a period of 20 min. Ventilation/perfusion inhomogeneities of Qv/Qt and arterial blood flow distribution were investigated by the multiple inert gas elimination technique. The order of ventilation was 10% O2 in N2 (3 s) + 30% O2 in N2 (3 s) + 30% O2 in N2 (3 s) + 15% O2 in N2 (3 s) + 0.1% O2 in N2 (3 s). The relative distribution (RD) of the regional blood flow, Qv/Qt, after 10% O2 in N2 was 0.58+/-0.04 in control and 0.53+/-0.01 in metoprolol (PComparing genetic and neural similarities between psychopathy and autism in young children: a diffusion tensor imaging study. A link between psychopathy and autism has been drawn in the literature. We compared microstructural white matter development and neural connectivity in a group of young children with psychopathy to children with autism and a matched control group on measures of diffusion tensor imaging (DTI) to examine neural similarities in these disorders. Thirty-nine children with autism, 37 with mild cognitive impairment, and 28 with psychopathy were recruited. We compared average and fractional anisotropy in genu and splenium of the corpus callosum and superior temporal gyrus in each group. DTI tractography was also performed to further compare white matter connectivity. The psychopathy group had significantly lower mean white matter fractional anisotropy than the autism group in the corpus callosum (genu, $F(2,101)=13.24$,
