Is there a difference in fibrosis in patients with primary hyperparathyroidism with and without glucose intolerance? A study was conducted to assess the prevalence of abnormal glucose tolerance in primary hyperparathyroidism (PHP) and to assess whether it predicts a different fibrosis level in the thyroid gland. Eighty-one patients with PHP were included in a case-control study. Thirty-seven patients were with normal glucose tolerance (NGT) and 44 had glucose intolerance (GI) (n = 20) or diabetes mellitus (DM) (n = 24). Patients with GI had a lower body mass index, higher waist circumference and higher plasma levels of cholesterol, triglycerides and low-density lipoprotein cholesterol. Triglycerides, cholesterol and low-density lipoprotein cholesterol were significantly lower in PHP patients with DM compared to PHP patients with NGT. Thyroid volume was higher in PHP patients with GI. There was no difference in thyroid volume between the two PHP groups. The percentage of patients with a higher fibrosis level was significantly lower in PHP patients with GI compared to PHP patients with NGT (30.7% vs. 47.1%, P = 0.043). They also had significantly lower fT3 and higher fT4 levels. Twenty-two percent of the group with GI had liver tests that did not reflect malnutrition, as they had no differences in high sensitivity C-reactive protein, white blood cell count, hemoglobin or albumin/globulin. In conclusion, there is a lower prevalence of abnormal glucose tolerance in PHP patients with a higher thyroid volume and lower degree of fibrosis in the thyroid gland.
