Well, in both cases, the torch is the body with the light inside. That's a pretty basic concept, one that some people might find mind-numbing, but even so, so many people are still caught in the trap of wrongly equating one of these two terms. Flashlights are great, but if you think about it, torch lights can do more than just light the way. The torch is useful for much more than just guiding people in the dark. The thing is, most people consider a torch to be a general purpose light source. It can light a path, but is not the best tool for that purpose. However, many people think that a torch is just that, a substitute for flashlights. It is not. Flashlights are a general purpose light source, and for some people, that's all that is needed. But not everyone is the same, and sometimes, you will need to use different tools. Whether that's because the light source is not reliable, or the light source is not reliable, then you will be able to see the difference in things like torches and flashlights. Lights, lights and more lights But before we can discuss about the difference between a torch and a flashlight, you need to know about the two in general. Flashlights don't need to have batteries to work, but torches do. Both of them are great tools, but the torch is more versatile and can be used for much more than lighting
