I was wondering if it was possible to have a user comment on my website. I'm creating a personal website, and my idea is that I have a blog, and users comment on individual posts, using their Twitter profile and email addresses. I was thinking that it may be possible to have Twitter use a mobile phone's GPS feature to allow a user to comment on my website. Does this sound like something that is possible? A: As @Vivek answered, such mobile apps are called "Rich Internet Applications". The best, and most likely starting point, would be to take a look at Twitter's JavaScript Docs, which contain some really good examples. I would also suggest looking at the documentation for the HTML5 "Geolocation API" (the "best" example is the echoplex demo). This allows the client to check the user's location, and then use a few parameters to discover and display info about the user (depending on whether you want to use the data in your app, which might be to only show the Twitter handle and location, or you want to access the Twitter API to get an up to date tweet). Disclaimer: I've written an RIA, it has nothing to do with Twitter. A: Sounds like a Twitter-capable mobile phone would be the way to go :)
