

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) has announced that the term "microaircraft," which has been used to describe commercial aircraft drones that are no larger than 55 pounds, will be replaced by the term "drones." By the end of this year, microflight aircraft will cease to be a "registered" aircraft as defined by the FAA and will need only to have an operator's certificate in order to fly. By 2020, all recreational aircraft will be subject to the same rules for operation and use of an aircraft, and by 2022, all aircraft will fall under the same regulations. This change in terminology has now been finalized with the FAA's Advisory Circular 150/530-30A. In new reads "drones" for all aircraft weighing 55 pounds or less. FAA The agency states that the change in language was made to bring consistency to the management of all aircraft and to reflect the technological advances that have allowed microflight aircraft to be used in various commercial and recreational ventures. They also point out that the pilots and operators of aircraft weighing more than 55 pounds are subject to the same regulatory standards regarding the safe operation of aircraft - weight, size, structure, equipment, and registration are all considered. The FAA expects the change in terminology to ensure that hobbyists and professional pilots, who have been operating with flexible terminology for decades, are clear in their communications with the FAA and each other. They also add that the FAA values the response from the public and the microflight aircraft industry during the rulemaking process, and they appreciate the community's flexible attitude toward use of micro-flight aircraft. Consolidation Aircraft, the chairman of the board of the International Association of Drone Operators (IAADO), says the change in terminology is a good thing. He adds that the FAA's General Aviation to allow for their operation within controlled airspace, but there are still some factors of their operations that are still restricted by the agency's regulations. The FAA has also made several attempts to close down the loopholes in its policy that provide an avenue for drone operation that he
