Photoshop's editing tools are often referred to as either the layers or masking system. The layers are the essential tools for any professional photographer. With layers, you can: * Collapse and hide individual layers, which, for example, enables you to see individual parts of a photo before and after you do an overlay. * Overlay images to mix and blend them together. * Edit images to create retouching effects, such as wrinkles, blemishes, or dark circles under the eyes. * Apply photo effects to create a black-and-white or sepia version of an image. * Build a simple photo from scratch, usually just one layer. * Expand an image by selecting individual layers from its layers mask. * Enable the Move tool to create new layers. * Create spot or burn corrections. * Improve an image's lighting with levels and histograms. * Keep layers organized in a folder (if you need to do so). * Create and name multiple layers. * Invert layers. * Adjust layers so that they blend with one another. Photos are cropped and rotated when you use the Rectangle Select tool in Photoshop. To crop photos, simply make a selection by either moving the cursor over the photo, or dragging a marquee over the area you want to select, and then use the Delete key to deselect the area. The Eraser tool can also work for this purpose, but in some cases the marquee technique works better. To rotate photos, hold down the Shift key while you make a selection and then rotate the selection. The Rotate tool can also be used to rotate. See Chapter 4 for more on cropping and rotating photos in Photoshop.

Q: how to combine column value into a single string i have a table like this :

ColorId	ProdId	NullColorId
0	0	null
3	0	null
4	1	null
6	1	null

I have a query that retrieve a count of the 'NullColorId' : select count(case when NullColorId is not null then 1 else 0 end) as nullcolorcnt from tbl I would like to get a list with 'ColorId' and 'ColorName' like this :

ColorId	ColorName	0	red	0	yellow	0	null	1	green	1	null	2	null	3	null	4	blue	5	null	6	null
0	red	0	yellow	0	null	1	green	1	null	2	null	3	null	4	blue	5	null	6	null

A: You have to use joins and unnest() function and group by ColorId to get the ColorName and ColorId for every values from NullColorId column. SELECT ColorId, ColorName FROM (SELECT ColorId, ColorName, NullColorId, NullColorId AS ColorId, COUNT() cnt FROM tbl GROUP BY ColorId) nested UNNEST(cnt) cnt WHERE NullColorId IS NOT NULL If you are using SQL Server, you could use window functions: SELECT ColorId, ColorName FROM (SELECT ColorId, ColorName, NullColorId, NullColorId AS ColorId, COUNT() cnt, COUNT(1) of the best management plans,” he said. Although it has gone through a lot of tests, Monterey’s proposed management plan hasn’t been finalized yet. Angeline’s partner Dave Hudson, in charge of science and research for the aquarium, was equally frustrated with the lack of updates and decisions being made about the tidal flows. “My main concern is that we are spending upwards of $500,000 a year to operate and there hasn’t been any decision about the future of the tidal flows,” he said. “We don’t even know where the water is coming from.” Monterey Bay’s reservoirs are fed by local rivers, streams, ocean water pumped up by wind and tidal currents. As of Tuesday, the water in the area's largest reservoir, Salt Creek, was just above minimum sea level, meaning its level will likely increase over the next year, like it has since 2008. Monterey Bay's Monterey and Carmel rivers are the main sources of water flowing into the nearby reservoirs. Both fall under the responsibility of the Salinas and San Rafael watersheds – both of which are under the control of the California State Water Project. The agency is a regulated state-federal water distribution and delivery agency that manages water utilities across the state, including in the Central Valley. Salinas water utilities on Tuesday released a statement saying the city's water is not currently being pumped into the Monterey Bay Aquarium's sea tanks but that, even if the current flows weren't being used, their water system is "capable of providing for both the aquarium and the total local community." According to a spokesperson for the Salinas Water Utilities, any additional flows would only be added to the reservoirs that already supply the aquarium. According to the Aquarium's animal care director, Michael Jenkins, they've reached the point where any additional flows are unlikely to be useful to the animals. Jenkins explained that each of the three large sea tanks were installed with a “sponge,” which sits on the bottom and filters out particles and organisms from the water. If flows were increased, Jenkins said, the animal tenders would likely need to replace those filters. “We can’t afford to put in a new one,” Jenkins said, “and even
