The game was developed for the Pixel Ripped Challenge, a Flash Game Jam. Pixel Ripped 1995 is a pixel art tribute to Super Mario World and its characters. Mario, Luigi and a couple of lady raccoons roam the desert of the Mushroom Kingdom, a world inhabited by one pixie in a tower. On the way they meet lots of obstacles: crates, enemies and Goombas. The game is a side-scrolling platformer in which you need to collect all the hidden stars in order to rescue one of the kidnapped ladies. You find star pieces from Goombas you hit them with your metal pipe, but you'll also need to solve environmental puzzles and jump on moving platforms. Throughout your journey you'll encounter Bowser's minions, some of which are incredibly difficult to beat. You'll also have to defend your world from a rampaging Goomba, who's a true menace. The soundtrack features a mix of classic Mario and Super Mario World music, as well as a couple of new tunes inspired by Pixel Ripped. Players of the Pixel Ripped Challenge will recognize a number of the challenges from the jam from the game. The game was written with procedural generation in mind, meaning there are no levels, but everything from the world to the music and enemies are created on the fly during the game, and often with considerable repetition, which really adds to the sense of adventure, and challenge. The environment consists of one room which may be difficult to navigate at times, and the only goal is to rescue the lady. There's no time limit or any other such mechanic, and the ending condition is based entirely on the player's actions. Currently it's set to about 4 or 5 minutes of gameplay, but you can play it as a short challenge on your own or as a more extended experience. You can find it at the Game Jam page. Download it here: Requirements: •Mac 10.6 Snow Leopard or later •Flash Player 11.5.5 or later •Intel -compatible processor and Windows -compatible graphics driver •4GB RAM •A very fast and modern computer with good graphics card will likely allow you to play the game at a playable speed. •Mac users are encouraged to enable High Sierra preference in the Security & Privacy preference panel •Windows users are encouraged to enable Graphics Processor and Driver
