Although Photoshop is a powerful tool, it can be a huge time waster if you don't know how to use the many features. For that reason, there are many good online tutorials that should serve you well as you take the initial plunge into Photoshop. You can find some online tutorials at `www.websitejourney.com/photoshop`. Given that Photoshop is often used by graphic designers as well as photographers, videographers, and others with a wide variety of backgrounds and needs, it is important to know how to change between the two modes in order to create the best look for a given project. Although Photoshop is a raster editor, it doesn't actually create or render raster images. The output of the image is produced by a pipeline of processes that translate the input to the desired output. In Photoshop, the pipeline is visible in the Layers panel. Photoshop Elements, the free version of Photoshop, includes some features that are similar to those in Photoshop. However, you can also edit some elements of a raster image in Photoshop Elements. ## Introducing Photoshop for Photography If you're just learning the ropes of digital photography, Photoshop is a great place to start. At the most basic level, Photoshop is an image editor — and a really good one at that. If you're looking to become a skilled photographer (which is definitely worth pursuing), you may find that the time you spend learning a powerful raster editor such as Photoshop — as opposed to more specialized applications such as Apple's iPhoto — is money well spent. A simple example of how to use the Photoshop image editor can be illustrated by the following series of steps: 1. Open an image in Photoshop. Remember, you can make the changes immediately, or you can save them as a copy that you can work on later. 2. Make a small change to the image. For instance, add or delete a few pixels in an area of the image by using the Move tool. To add pixels, hold down the Ctrl (Windows) or Command (Mac) key and click-and-drag across the area where you want to add some pixels. If you need to delete some pixels, Ctrl+click or Command+click and drag the outline of the area you want to remove pixels from. If you want to make changes to an image that you're working on, be sure to lock the layers so that they don't Romania will apply to European Union's Schengen zone at the end of 2019 Romania will apply to join the European Union's Schengen zone at the end of 2019, Foreign Minister Teodor Baconschi said at a news conference in Bucharest on Sunday. Baconschi said Romania's application was ready and would take place in 2019. "This application will be followed by others, including Bulgaria and a new country. In the next years, we expect to be able to complete the (EU) reform process with the support of our Romanian partners," he said. Mihai Fifor, the Romanian interior minister, said the country was fully prepared. "The necessary technical requirements and conditions for this procedure to be completed are now being met," he told reporters. Baconschi said that to join the Schengen zone, which allows the free movement of people, Romania would have to complete the legislative framework and comply with obligations to other Schengen members. Romania and Bulgaria are the only countries in Europe that have been out of the Schengen zone since the 2016 terror attacks in Paris and Berlin. Baconschi said that in his talks with his German counterpart, Heiko Maas, Romania had assured him it was committed to preventing all forms of terrorism, including the recruitment of people for ISIS. "Germany will be the first and most important to receive Romanian citizens, in line with the European standards. This will be subject to a dialogue between the interior ministers of the two countries," he said.

Meanwhile, Fifor said the main goal of Romania's joining the Schengen zone was to create a "security area" within Europe to counter threats, primarily from Russia, where he said terrorists were increasingly active. "This new task represents an important security challenge and we will act in coordination with our partners," he said. This article was updated at 18:28 on October 1.
