getting started, you can click your way through Photoshop like a pro. The following sections cover the basics of the Photoshop workflow. Opening files Opening any file type can be a daunting task for beginners, but fortunately, you don't have to. Open a file by double-clicking its icon on your desktop or within Windows Explorer (which is what Windows desktop users use). In Photoshop, when you select a file, you see a list of options. You can either open the file or save it. When you double-click the image icon for a JPEG or TIFF file, it opens into Photoshop. You don't have the option to open other file types; you have to save the file as a new version. To save an image as a new version in a different file type, choose File⇒Save. A Save As dialog box appears. Click the File Type drop-down arrow, and then choose the new version of the file that you want to save. Click Save. If you don't want to see the Save As dialog box, use Shift+Ctrl+S/Shift+⌘-S on a Mac. Managing Layers

Mr. Greeley's Strategy for Making America Think Again

We need to spend more time with people who are different from us, we need to listen, and we need to learn things about each other and ourselves. We need to call out bad arguments, just as we call out bad arguments or bad behavior in others. We need to be tactful and considerate when we talk with those we disagree with. We need to make sure that our children know how to handle conflict and disagreement. We need to do things we've never done before, and we need to learn how to live with one another and with ourselves in a brand-new way. Not all of those things will work in the short term. All of them could be lost, as things currently are, because we're afraid to back down on certain positions, and we don't know how to meet those who are different from us. We are in a moment of deep change. We need to learn new strategies for dealing with each other as we go through those changes, or we'll be lost. Those of us who do some or all of those things, and who want to fight the good fight together against the authoritarians who are killing our country as fast as they can, need to be together as much as possible. If you work for one of the institutions that can help us, be there for us. Work for a foundation and build it. Be with a group of people and use every moment to help each other out, to build our own little constellation of decency. If you're the public, be there for the people we need to work with and through, who are at our best when we work with them. Get out of your own way, be there for people, don't be in a rush to shout them down, and watch the power of good that comes with it. Help people see how beautiful the world really is. Make images of freedom possible. We don't have to understand a single thing about anything. We don't even have to speak to each other at all. That's how to have a conversation with God. Japan's economy grew at an annualised rate of 3.7 per cent in the second quarter this year, the government said on Monday, its fastest pace since the 2011 earthquake and tsunami disaster, while higher commodity prices and a surge in Japanese exports supported the economy. The data means the economy is currently only just meeting the Bank of Japan's growth target of 2 per cent plus for the year, a feat it has not achieved since before the March 2011 earthquake and nuclear crisis. Ahead of release of the second quarter data, government officials hinted that the BoJ will need to ease policy further to achieve the target. The government forecast growth of 3.0 per cent for the full year, with a range of 2.8 per cent to 3.4 per cent. The median estimate of 26 economists surveyed by Bloomberg was 3.1 per cent. The government's statistics agency said there was a decrease in the yen's value, partly as a result of foreign investors buying assets abroad that were more likely to increase in price when the currency moves. It also benefited from a surplus in the first quarter, while farm income and the value of consumption based on household data surged. A stronger yen is the “major threat” to the economy, Deputy Finance Minister Akihiro Ohira said after the data release. “If the trend in the yen continues, the economy will be weaker.” Domestic spending rose 3 per cent from a year earlier in the quarter, surpassing analysts’ forecasts in part because of strong purchases by households and firms
