External systems The Autodesk Advantage Customer Relationship Management (CRM) software is available for AutoCAD and other products. Typical CAD applications are also supported by a CAD-based reverse engineering technology. This is part of Autodesk Vault, a system that allows capturing the information of an existing model. This information is later converted to other CAD formats. Examples of this technology include converting architectural drawings to AutoCAD DWG format and scanning paper plans. Autodesk also supports the AccuCAD reverse engineering technology. Vistare Vistare, a CAD system developed by Vistec Image Technologies, is a CAD software for AutoCAD that is free of charge. The Vistare software is integrated with AutoCAD and can run within the AutoCAD environment. It is available on a 1.7G installation CD. Vistare is able to read, import, and export to AutoCAD, and also supports AutoCAD 2009 and later. A user can use Vistare's drawing management tools, such as create editing and analysis tools to improve the quality of drawings. It also provides export to DXF, DWG, and PDF. In March 2009, Vistare was acquired by Parametric Technology Corporation, a Siemens Business, from Germany. I am trying to display an image in my component. If the condition evaluates to true then the image should display. I am able to do it by adding the label (display image if condition evaluates to true) but I do not want to do it like that. I am using the *ngIf statement in my template and this is the code: `{{user.userName}}` This displays the image if the condition evaluates to true but the span is not displayed, but in the developer tools I can see the tag being there. A: You could just add a class to the span as an alternative to the ng-template: `{{user.userName}}` Then your CSS might look like: `.empty-if-flag-is-null { display: none; }` A: There are
