I am using GIT in a group project at work where I am essentially trying to create a community project and allow people in the group to use GIT to commit files. What I don't want them to do is actually make any changes to the actual source code files. How can I allow them to change text and just leave the actual source files the way they are? I have been using GIT for a long time and I don't remember finding this answer when I needed it. The other thing I'm not looking for is the full blown GUI which I've seen many of the GIT tutorials using as an example to create a "Windows Install" like environment. I don't have time for that and that seems like overkill for a large project. Thanks. A: Doing so is really quite simple, and you can do so even if the project was created by you.
