Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a battery separator for a portable battery (also called a "secondary battery" or a "battery"), especially for use in lithium-ion batteries, and its manufacturing method, and more particularly relates to a lithium-ion battery separator suitable for a laminated cell battery. 2. Description of the Related Art As is well known, batteries are classified as primary batteries (non-rechargeable) and secondary batteries (rechargeable). A secondary battery has a considerably long shelf life compared to a primary battery, and for this reason, a secondary battery is mainly used in portable electronic devices. A secondary battery includes a positive electrode, negative electrode and a separator interposed therebetween, and as a separator for the secondary battery, various separators have been proposed. One of them is a lithium-ion battery separator. The separator of a lithium-ion battery separator has an electrolyte (ion exchange resin film) that forms pores for permeating lithium ions. In addition, it requires certain functions. That is, it is required to be strong against deformation caused by its own weight, by the external force applied to the battery, and by the temperature change. In addition, the separator is required to be no cell reaction in case a lithium-ion battery is overcharged and should be led to become non-functional. Furthermore, in case of manufacturing a lithium-ion battery, an electrode paste (active material, conductive material) is applied on a metal foil. Then, a separator is laminated on the electrode paste, rolled to form an electrode sheet and cut into a predetermined size. Then, another electrode sheet is laminated on the other surface of the separator to form a pair of electrode sheets. Then, a plurality of the electrode sheets are laminated on each other, and laminated so as to form the battery. Lithium-ion battery separators are required to have appropriate strength, gas-barrier properties and permeation properties. In case lithium-ion battery
