Iran-backed insurgents in Iraq have "largely" regained control of two strategic areas in the country, the latest in a string of victories in recent weeks for their top commander. Sabah al-Salim, the head of the Quds Force commander of the Popular Mobilization Units (PMU) and an Iraqi Shia cleric, said his fighters have regained control of the towns of al-Taji and Amara, which could give them a strategic foothold around Baghdad. "We have fully liberated the two areas," he told the Al Mayadeen TV. The development is a setback for the Iraqi government, which is struggling to quell the Sunni Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL, also known as ISIS) that has seized the Iraqi city of Tikrit. Troops from the Shia militias have been on the offensive this week, backed by air strikes, as part of the campaign to take back Tikrit, which had been under the control of ISIL, before its advance. "As of today, we have achieved victory in the liberation of the four major military bases in Saladin province," Mr. Salim said, referring to the main Sunni province in western Iraq. "This success means that we have been able to defeat ISIL in Saladin province and we have increased the number of areas under our control in Saladin province to 12," he said. Iraqi, coalition forces will be in Tikrit by tomorrow morning "The most important thing is that we have managed to liberate Tikrit, [and] we e79caf774b
