Disk Drill 5 Crack is the user-friendly and easy-to-useÂ .Q: How to check if any of the elements of a multidimensional array are true? I have a multidimensional array like so: $terms = array(array('key' => 'word', 'value' => 100), array('key' => 'word', 'value' => 50), array('key' => 'word', 'value' => 200), array('key' => 'word', 'value' => 100),); How can I check if any of the values in that array is greater than 50? In that example it's not possible to get a true value since the value in the first element is > 50 and then the same in the third. A: Checking if any element is greater than 50 would look like this: foreach ($terms as $term) { if ($term['value'] > 50) { //$term is greater than 50 } } To loop through all of the values in the array, you can use the following syntax: foreach ($terms as $term) { //if $term is greater than 50 then perform whatever action you desire. } If you want to display the elements of the array that satisfy the condition, use this syntax: $filter = array_filter($terms, function ($term) { return ($term['value'] > 50); }); //For example, if you want to display the terms that are greater than 50: foreach ($terms as $term) { if ($term['value'] > 50) { echo $term['key']. ': '. $term['value']. ''; } } An example of code will look like this:
