Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a power transmission apparatus. 2. Description of the Related Art There are the following known power transmission apparatuses for automobiles: an electromagnetic induction power transmission apparatus that generates a power transmission torque by a magnetic coupling; a force coupling power transmission apparatus that generates a power transmission torque by a physical contact between gears; and a hybrid drive apparatus (hereinafter simply referred to as an HST) that generates a power transmission torque by a combination of the magnetic coupling and the force coupling. For example, the HST includes a first flywheel supported by a first center gear in an output shaft through a first bearing, and a second flywheel supported by a second center gear in an input shaft through a second bearing, and generates a power transmission torque by a combination of the physical contact between the first flywheel and the first center gear and the physical contact between the second flywheel and the second center gear. When the first flywheel is rotated at high speed by a power from an engine, or the second flywheel is rotated at high speed by a power from an electric motor, the flywheels may have high rotational speeds so that an excessive load may act on the bearings. In view of this, in order to decrease an energy loss in the bearings, it is proposed that a flywheel made of a high-strength material is used for a flywheel having a large capacity (high rotational speed). For example, JP-A 2007-271634 discloses a technique that uses a high-strength fly d0c515b9f4
