The "high seas" legend has long been a staple of popular culture; if not the specific term, then perhaps more than anything we might call it a "poster-child" for the very idea of a life of freedom, adventure and somewhat limitless opportunity. This doesn't even get into the societal and psychological importance placed upon the concept of "manning the deck" or the "second watch" - all part of what makes this alluring content possible. Since the USA's founding, it has remained a foremost ideal for us, our society and our children as a nation, with perhaps the greatest sailing ship being the Constitution, which exemplified and revered this ideal more than most any other vessel prior to or since. is a collectible shooting game with a complex combat system and epic experience! Where to get it: Twitter: Facebook: Twitter: YouTube: Website: Part 2: The Plebgate In July 2014, fizzing with excitement, Planet Coaster creator Frontier decided to launch a Kickstarter campaign to expand their tunnel-based amusement, with the ambitious goal of reaching $850,000 (at the time, equivalent to $1,134,632). While the average Kickstarter campaign costs $90,000-125,000, Frontier's pro-bono legal team worked tirelessly, spending $150,000 to have the opening pledge reward of a collaborative remake of the Lonely Mountain mountain scene from The Hobbitin place before opening their campaign. Playing a critical role in a successful campaign is the game's stunning official trailer, featuring none other than Sir Ian McKellen and Sir John Hurt. Less than a week later, the campaign reached its ambitious goal and went on to raise $1,075,587, setting a Kickstarter record at the time for a theme park based game and, ultimately, at the time at any video game development effort. "This game changed our studio," said Erik Krincek, game director of Planet Coaster, quoting founder Jason Houston. Well, not immediately. While he was toiling away on the studio's next title, he was also a consultant to Frontier for a couple of projects in Frontier's pipeline: playing for both the third and fourth title in their Planet Coaster series and serving as a consultant for their first title, Beyond Planet Coaster, a project he's certain was nipping at his heels. When BeyondPlanet Coaster was announced in 2011, he thought he was wrapping up Planet Coaster. He got the first copy he could and finished the first build of Planet Coaster within a few weeks. It was exceptionally fun, but at the risk of looking too much like a "tourist game," in Ian's words, it felt too light. Still, the ambition and scope seemed to prove why the team had called it

DESTROY all defenses and live to see the light of day! Collect stars and money and power-ups to destroy not just the enemies but the structures built by those enemies! How to Play Find a problem, solve it, and move to the next one. For example: If there are three enemies in the same place, destroying just one is enough to solve the problem. But how to destroy all three? Well, you can collect some power-ups that give you the ability to defeat more enemies. And you can make your own ability cards to make enemies more vulnerable. Like, instead of a gun, you can make them shoot something. And in the space of 20 minutes or so, you can also build some different structures around the arena. And try to survive for 10 minutes to reach the End, the only time you can earn stars or money. And just like real life, more enemies can be added at a later time. In addition, there are four different game modes to play through, with endless depth and challenge. Build Your Own Battles You can build your own challenge by combining structures, abilities, and power-ups. Let's say, you want to start a battle where you need to collect a large number of money and items. You can build your own towers around the map. But you can also combine a number of abilities with the tower to make them evolve into one of the more powerful types. You can also connect a number of towers using power-ups to complete the mission. To give you an example, here is one of my best battles. I built 3 towers and used power-ups to connect them. And they were all connected to a single ability. You can find many more combinations that will change the entire structure of the battle. And if a connection cannot be made, it will remain as a tower. In addition, you can also change the number of enemies to spawn in a single battle. Other than the challenge of building new combinations, to survive, you need to create your own strategy in the battle. e.g. You can use a single ability to destroy a lot of enemies at once. Or you can build a larger area, so that it takes less time to defeat enemies. How do you plan to defeat all enemies? That's the thing you can discover on your own. However, if you would like to share your strategy in a fight, you can save a
