Diptyque Spring 2012 A roundup of everything new we've spotted (and loved) at the Diptyque Spring 2012 show Now more than ever, it seems, the world of perfume is taking inspiration from the natural world: we've seen it before with the pioneering photography of Ken Price, et al, and the real efforts of the Narativ project, and in Paris this season Diptyque have taken the prize for a new genre: the wearable art perfume. But Diptyque have always made some of the most beautiful perfume, almost as good as the labels themselves. The posters for Paris were a masterclass in style over substance, and this spring's Paris (a pale orange, violet) was deliciously floral, but we're really in love with their new Autumn-Winter collection. In the short film, shot by Oscar-nominated director Tim Harris, Diptyque describe the essence of their new collection as "what could be translated as undressing the scent"
