GEOFF MORRIS He was a four-time champion in North America, and a national team member and coach in Europe. But without a doubt, Geof was best known for his standout field events, particularly the 10,000 metres, at the Olympics and major championships in the late 1980s and early 1990s. Geof's greatest Olympic performance came in the 1988 Seoul Olympics, when he placed fifth in the final, a sterling result for a non-citizen athlete. His 1992 World Championships final was delayed by an erroneous judgment of the toss, and he ended up finishing the race from sixth place. After that, Geof was a regular finalist in both the Olympics and World Championships. He came closest to winning a gold medal at the World Championships in 1991, when he came from third on the track to first place in the final. But Geof rarely started races well, and often faded. In 1994, for example, he abandoned his 10,000 heats halfway through and hit the showers when a teammate led from the start. He was very popular in New Zealand, where he was born. Geof's appearance (particularly his extraordinary hair) is an enduring image for New Zealand athletics. Geof also had a major impact on the international coaching scene, as national men's team manager and coach of the Commonwealth Games. For several years he was a full-time coach in Australia, while he also held a senior coaching role in the Northern Hemisphere. Geof competed with type one diabetes (T1D) for much of his athletics career. He set world records in the 800 m and the 1500 m, and his experience in managing T1D was used in the development of insulin pumps, which were later used by the World Health Organisation to reduce the risk of death from T1D. Geof was diagnosed with T1D
