I'd suggest you to use Google Chrome for some free apps. Similar to Google Play Store, you can download any application from their website by just downloading the file of the application itself. You don't need to download any third-party app, just use Google Chrome as your browser and install the app you need on your phone. By using Chromecast, you can cast your phone screen directly to TV by using Chromecast. By using Google Play Games, you can do all kinds of games and play them with a group of friends. By using Google Drive, you can store all your files online and access them whenever you need. By using Google Play Music, you can play your favourite music online or download any song you like. The best part of all of these apps and services are that they are FREE to use. You can use any one of them according to your need and they are super easy to use. Just use your phone as your primary device and use the rest as your secondary one. Q: Binding to DateTime Format property I have a control, which has a TextProperty bound to some property with the FormatString. How can I bind to this FormatString property? The value of the FormatString has to be the date in a specified format, but also bind the control to a property representing the current date (not just the date in the format defined by the FormatString). A: I hope it helps. In the format string you can use it like @{ someDate.ToString("yyyy-MM-dd"); } This disclosure relates generally to methods and systems for determining properties of well fluids, such as gas or oil based well fluid, at a downhole well site. Deepwater Horizon oil rig explosion resulted in the release of millions of barrels of oil and gas into the Gulf of Mexico. Due to the marine environment and large amount of oil recovered in the Gulf, a significant number of well sites are located close to the water and present several challenges to the oil and gas industry in tracking the recovery of oil from a well. One of the key challenges to the oil industry are sunken oil and gas wells
