I have a table of polylines that I want to overlay on a map. It is not possible to add the same feature multiple times since it will crash ArcMap. When I import the data ArcGIS Pro will attempt to autotile the data. Is there any way to prevent this from happening? A: From the Help To avoid rendering artifacts of such changes and to preserve the original data In most cases, you can append the original layer to the Projected projected workspace and then re-import the linked layer. In some scenarios, you can use the Projected workspace as a starting point and then transform to other projections in-place. You need to use the Projected environment. See the documentation here: Q: Algorithm to solve Grid puzzle Given a 9x9 grid filled with 1s, What is the minimum number of times a square will be filled with 1s to make it a "grid-puzzle", i.e. there are no "gaps" on the edges of the grid. How to do it in the minimum possible number of moves? A: If we look at the problem from a different angle, it becomes easier to solve. We will need to determine a minimal set of moves, where you have to change the value of a tile into a 1, and putting a tile in the top left corner is the optimal solution (Because any other tile can be moved there by a single movement, and putting it there puts the rest of the grid in the solution state). Let's call the optimal tile 1, and the rest 0. In order to get a solution, it would be sufficient to start with the empty tile, and then proceed via a sequence of moves (which are one of the diagonals and the edges). Let's count the number of moves with a sequence of (initially empty) tiles that ends in a solution, i.e. put tile 1 at the top left corner. Columns: 0
