The problem is how to send and receive data in a SIP call in a Cisco IP phone? A: The problem is how to send and receive data in a SIP call in a Cisco IP phone. What is a "cisco phone"? Cisco's line of IP Phones are in fact analog phones which use off the shelf telephony software that runs on a PC. The IP network layer is just there as a network transport. Cisco IOS support for VoIP in these devices is therefore somewhat limited. But, it's pretty simple. You use an SIP trunk to make calls on other VoIP providers or directly to other phones. The current SIP standard supports only static registrations, so you always know what phone is calling which phone. Call state transfer is not done and received calls are dropped. The Cisco phone protocol is fairly simple and the basic desktop soft phones work pretty well.
