AutoCAD 2017 Raster Design Version: 2017,, For the Autodesk Architectural Modeling.Exploring Patient and Provider Factors Associated with Medication Adherence, Persistence, and Switching for State Medicaid Patients With Chronic and Self-Limited Asthma. Medication adherence and persistence are often poor, even among patients with chronic and severe conditions. We explored the relationship between adherence and persistence among Medicaid patients with asthma treated by primary care physicians. We conducted a retrospective cohort study of Medicaid patients with asthma on an employer plan and >365 days of follow-up during 2006-2013 using administrative claims data. We determined the number of days covered (NDC), proportion of days covered (PDC), and persistence. We defined adherence as NDC >80%. We assessed demographic, clinical, and medication factors associated with adherence and persistence. We used multivariable logistic regression to determine factors associated with adherence, persistence, and medication switching. We used multivariable linear regression to determine factors associated with PDC. All comparisons were stratified by self-limited vs chronic asthma. There were 2,150 patients with asthma who met study criteria; 1,237 (58%) were chronic and 913 (42%) were self-limited. Adjusted odds ratios (AOR) [95% CI] for adherence were 0.94 (0.84, 1.06) and 1.47 (1.23, 1.77) for chronic and self-limited asthma, respectively. For persistence, AOR [95% CI] for chronic and self-limited asthma were 0.96 (0.92, 1.01) and 0.91 (0.84, 0.99), respectively. Adherence was associated with being 65 years or older, female, and having an outpatient visit in 2011. Persistence was associated with being 65 years or older, being treated by a primary care physician, and having 1 or more outpatient visit in
