The Pride of New Zealand by Ayn Rand In the beginning, when it was laid down by the Creator, there were no physical limits to the physical universe. Man and nature were still in close harmony, and God watched over the process of man's evolution. Taken from "The Blind Allegiance", chapter 8. The Pride of New Zealand As soon as the human race had arisen there came an evolution of thought: the first philosophers were born. These men turned their attention toward the nature of mind, the nature of the world, and the nature of man; they were atheists, and their aim was to find a rational answer to the questions of their existence, their world and their freedom. Their
