"Å .Time, money, and energy are central to writing, but my ability to write fiction began as a spectator sport.. As a theater-goer, I would make several theater visits a week, sometimes for several hours at a time. That allowed time for thinking. The theatrical experience, too, allows you to meditate, stare into space, and think your way through it. When the lights go down and the curtain rises, every light in the theater is turned on. It's a sea of lights that surrounds you. You're sitting in the middle of a space where you can look around, up, and down without seeing anyone. You feel there's no one there with you, yet you're connected to all of that vast space. When I began writing, I would write in the theater all the time. Having the theater for a writer's nest gave me a place to think and write. When a play opened, I'd rush right in and stay for the entire run. I'd spend eight hours a night watching c6a93da74d
