Urine from 20 patients with bladder carcinoma (3 with stage A, 15 with B or C and 2 with B or C plus metastases) was examined. Eleven patients were treated by radical cystectomy and the remaining 9 by transurethral resection. The serum and urine creatine kinase activity (CK) and the urine creatinine was measured and the following statistical methods were used. By means of the Student's t-test it was concluded that the mean serum CK level was significantly higher in patients with a bladder carcinoma than in healthy controls. There was no statistically significant difference between the two groups in the creatinine levels of the serum or urine. In 17 patients with a bladder carcinoma it was also found that the mean serum CK activity and mean urine CK activity were significantly higher in all the stages of disease than in the controls and in stage C they were also higher than in those with B or C plus metastases. The mean urine CK activity in stage A was the same as in the controls. By the means of the Student's t-test the mean urine CK activity in stage B was higher than in stage C plus metastases. The results show that the total CK activity in urine is significantly higher in those with bladder carcinoma than in healthy controls. A significant difference between the mean urine CK activity in all the stages of the disease was also found.Optical coherence tomography study of cross-sectional retinal ganglion cell morphology in human and monkey retina. The axon terminals of retinal ganglion cells are known to form the largest synapse in the brain. Although axon terminals have been well studied in rodent retinas using two-photon microscopy, only fragmentary structural information is available for retinal ganglion cell axon terminals in primate retinae. Optical coherence tomography (OCT) and three-dimensional (3D) image reconstruction are suitable for imaging axon terminals in retinal tissue. The purpose of this study was to obtain 3D images of axon terminals of retinal ganglion cells and to compare their morphology in human and monkey retinas. Optical coherence tomography was performed on fixed eyes from 21 human donors (2, 7, and 12 months of age) and four adult monkeys (Macaca mulatta). In all eyes, ganglion cell axon terminals were imaged using peroxidase-labeling of retinal ganglion cell axons. Ganglion cell axon terminals were identified with 3D image reconstruction, and three-dimensional reconstructions of ganglion cell axon terminals were constructed. In human and monkey retinas, ganglion cell axon terminals were regularly found in the inner plexiform layer, with a honeycomb pattern in orthogonal cross-sectional planes.
