On the Cracker tab, three tabs are available for different kinds of Passwords (in the form of encrypted data), Metadata(Info such as if users are employees, managers,friends,etc.), and Hashes(Cain automatically generates it in the form of LM NTLM hashes of Passwords and other important data).In this particular example, we will be looking at information collected from the LAN.In order to do this, we must first disable the Sniff and dump features. This can be done by simply unchecking the boxes underneath the tabs.Now, let us start by selecting the SAM file, and then clicking the sniff and dump tab.A new window will open, as shown in the following image: Once you have selected the sniff tab, select the LAN traffic and click OK.Now, you will have the option to take a snapshot of all the files that are being transmitted on the network.You can save the information as a SAM file in order to compare and crack the Passwords on the Cracker tab.Note that this is not recommended on a live LAN.The sniffer can be run on only one port at a time. On the Cracker tab, there are three tabs for Passwords and Lm Ntlm Hashes, Metadata, and Cracked Passwords.Depending on the outcome of the sniffer, you can edit your snapshots and upload them for cracking on the Cracked Passwords tab.The less Passwords you crack, the less impact you will have on your network. Now its time to speak about the cracker tab,the most important feature of Cain.When Cain captures some LM and NTLM hashes or any kind of Passwords for any supported protocols, Cain sends them automatically to the Cracker tab.We will import a local SAM file just for demonstration purposes to illustrate this point.Here is how to import the SAM file:
