Hauptwerk - Velesovo Organ, Wet Only Utorrent

one of the main characteristics of the organ is a single, full-sounding and quite expressive principal, which is similar to the german-speaking organs but with a slight but important difference: the crescendo starts at the last tone, and then rises without breaking up. nevertheless, the best range of crescendo is still the range of 19 tones, starting with the first tone. the key has a rather narrow pitch range (range of 24 tones), which makes the stops mostly similar in sound, although the organ with a wider range may tend to sound a bit brighter. however, the crescendo begins at the last tone, and the only exception is the crescendo range of 16 tones which will sound slightly brighter. thus, the true top range of the principal is limited to the last two tones, which is the smallest possible range for a principal. the range of 19 tones is however the most appropriate for the range of flute stops. the stop mixture is often flute reeds, which is common for organ of the given period, and the mixture is full-sounding, and often the intensity of flute is slightly lower than the intensity of the principal, which is similar to the late german school. however, in other organs, the flute and the principal may be performed by the same player and the lowest flute is sometimes performed by the principal voice. the flute stop is characterized by a quick rise of the sound from the last tone to the highest pitch, which means that the sound is much shorter and lighter than the principal sound. but the crescendo of the flute is exactly like the crescendo of the principal. the flutes are very important stops in the organ and they are the most characteristic south german stops. the main characteristic of the flute is a very fast, bright and light sound. it is the organ stop which is most often heard in the choruses of the well-known south german dances: the jünglingschlachten (also known as the jägerschlachten), the herreschlachten or the stiersegeschlachten. the sound of the flute is very similar to the sound of the flute in the well-known konzert auf dem fenn (a concert on the rope). the top range of the flute is usually restricted to the last five tones (out of 16, starting from the last tone). the flute has a very short sound (the sound does not reach the highest pitch), which is often said that the flute has almost no pitch, at least in the highest range. 5ec8ef588b
