
The Matrix Path Of Neo Patch 1.2

The second part of the patch notes released today indicates that Matrix 3 is said to be the father of all sequels, and this time the characters would be given a vision of the past. The reason why the movies do not quite work as a trilogy is because of this, it is basically them re-writing the same story they had done in 2001 but this time in a more profound way. Although Reloaded and Revolutions both fail to tell very good stories, they at least work as a self-contained film. It is only because they are interconnected does it not work as a trilogy but as a series of films. As you can see, an interesting first step would be to fix the story of the Matrix movie franchise, but it is pretty clear this is going to be an extremely long process. Lets hope some grand plan eventually reveals itself. Here is the best argument I have found for why Matrix Revolutions did not work, it was a linear retelling of the original Matrix and did not innovate in any way. Using this precedent, we can effectively rewrite the backstories of Reloaded and Revolutions as being linear narratives. The Reloaded version can be split into 2 story arcs, one for Smith and one for Neo, and similarly Revolutions can be split into 2 arcs for Neo and Agent Smith. Lets go with a 3 arc narrative for Reloaded, its a fight scene at the very start of the first movie, and then Neo rescues Trinity from a hostile party. Neo (second arc) is a pretender, he basically pretends to believe in the program. Agent Smith (first arc) is the bad guy in his predicament, he is a pawn of a bigger war. Smith is eventually defeated. The other option would be a 2 arc arc, Smith and Neo, for Reloaded. The problem is that, in both of these versions, Smith is defeated rather quickly, which doesnt really work in a battle-driven movie like Reloaded.

The Matrix Path Of Neo Patch 1.2

Right at the climax of the trilogy, Neo realizes that he is the One in the way that he is the last, the very last, the last hopeful of the Matrix. But he also realizes that he is the product of the Architect, the creation that the Architect always wanted, he is the long look in the eyes of the mother of the Matrix who always knew the truth of the Matrix but never saw the point in caring. The Wachowskis have clearly always planned on returning to the trilogy for another movie, so much so that they have created this second part to begin to explore the themes that they were already aware of but that needed fleshing out. The first idea, The Matrix Path Of Neo, had to be rethought and tweaked considerably, and some fans were upset that the original direction was changed. The idea of a series of games, the first one being Matrix, seemed to be a nice idea at the time, but now its really not that original. The Microsoft Game Studios' Mortal Kombat is probably as close as we are going to get to a successful sequential fighting title that is massively influenced by the Matrix saga. What was really exciting, and many people will think of this as a copout of a writer, was the emphasis that the Wachowskis placed on the character of the Architect, and how he could not be ignored within the Matrix universe. The Architect has been in the background of the movies, but if Neo disappears, the Architect goes out and it was his influence that caused it. Youll need to watch the three films again to get that, the Architect is the real villain. The Architect appears both in the first Matrix film, and almost as in some important way is the real villain, he is more powerful than Smith and the Merovingian. 5ec8ef588b
