Foobar2000.v1.3.8.FINAL...Portable.DarkOne.v4.0.wasapi.component

This release fixes an issue that prevented music-players from starting with the wasapi-plugin active, it also changes the behaviour of the wasapi-plugin to match what Winamp does. It now allows any foobar2000 application that has a tray icon to also start with the wasapi-plugin active. This is the first version of foobar2000 that can scan USB devices using wasapi. It's also the first version of foobar2000 where it's possible to select the device after which the first track is played. This release fixes a couple of problems with the Winamp-plugin-in. Now the Winamp user-interface will work again. The foobar2000 tray icon will now start Winamp as soon as it is installed and foobar2000 will be set as the default player. If you've installed Foobar2000 manually (e.g. Winamp-plugin-in), your search-sorting behaviour may be different than other users. The Winamp-plugin-in orders the result-list automatically in the order in which the files are found (file-name-ascending), while the foobar2000 installer works similar to what iTunes does - storing the results of a search in the order of insertion (file-name-ascending). If you experience a different file-sorting behaviour, you might want to uninstall the Winamp-plugin-in and reinstall it to match the foobar2000 installer's behaviour. This version has additional search functionality (previously only available in the foobar2000-1.3.8-FINAL.zip). When you start the search, all items found in the current directory will be shown. On the right of the window you can see the currently used filter, you can use that to restrict the list of files you see. The files are added to the list in the order you find them in the directory, with the most recently found file listed first. NOTE: The list will only update, if foobar2000 is not running. 5ec8ef588b
